"they've got a good sense of humor, and they sound top-notch"
– Metal Sucks

"boozy blast of heathen prog" – Team Rock

"Le metal a du talent." – Metal France

"If you'd like a taste of the brew Protokult has on tap, check out the eclectic, hoppy folk thrasher "Get Me a Beer". Indeed this mix of traditional folk, thrash metal, death metal, and other genres will have you stomping your feet and drinking too fast." - Yell Magazine

"The rousing opening track "Get Me A Beer" is alcohol-fueled folk metal with similarities to bands like Korpiklaani, but they have many other facets... It's an extremely diverse album"
– Heavy Metal. About.com

"Ah this album was a pleasure to review. So many albums are a slog to get through, but I was sorry when No Beer In Heaven ended... time. I love the album artwork and presentation too. This is a band the world needs to hear more of. Highly recommended! – Hellbound

"a superb album. Protokult gives folk-metal a new nice dimension. Their progressive folk-metal approach is a very delicious one. Don't let the 'beer-titles' fool you, the band goals are far beyond beer-humpaa. They're far more serious, despite of the sometimes quite merry tunes. This is one of the best folk-metal albums I've heard this year" – Folk-Metal.nl

"Protokult is a colourful collective, made up of four guys and a lady...It is a versatile album...progressive twists and turns in the songs and surprising approaches." – Lords of Metal

"Folk and metal comes together in an epic way with Protokult. The mix is perfect for the party and other festivity's that needs a nice kick in the ass, like a metal heads funeral. Hooks, beer and the ever changing change ups makes this LP one for the books."
– Tommy Tee – The Metal Factory on Insane Realm Radio.com

As interests in history, paganism and folklore took an increasingly strong hold on folk metallers PROTOKULT, the band was inspired to unleash its debut album, Ancestral Anthems. With the first two pressings selling out in months, they vowed to take things to the next level while continuing to deliver a unique mix of Canadian and international influences.

PROTOKULT's goal? To unite its members' diverse cultures into one sound, balancing tradition and folklore with heavy, thrash and black metal for headbangers everywhere.

Over the past few years, the ever-evolving PROTOKULT has graced the stage with the likes of ARKONA, TURISAS, ALESTORM, BLACKGUARD (formerly Profugus Mortis) and WILL OF THE ANCIENTS and now they're ready to unveil a full-length follow-up to 2011 EP Marzena.

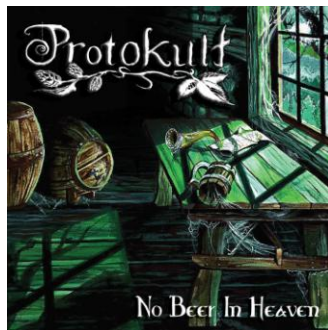

With a beauty and the beast-like contrast between Ekaterina's haunting vocals and the band's metal onslaught, No Beer In Heaven, which is slated for an August 8 release, captures the reformed quintet at an all-time high, showcasing an impressive palette of entirely new compositions, and straps the listener on an adventurous, heavy and experimental trek, diving into themes of drinking, history and human endeavor.
